I understand your frustration!

What I was able to find out from the assistant to the person that I am dealing with is they are in the process of drafting the lien letter. She is unable to tell me numbers, but at least we do know that is in process. That is a huge step forward.

Lori, it has been a month now since their meeting & still no word. I'm sorry I know you're all about the gentle nagging but to say this is ridiculous is the understatement of the year. We simply cannot continue this line of a weeks of no communication. We have the right to know what is going on.

Hello Lori,
Any word from Medicare? This is getting ridiculous again.

FYI. I called again this morning. Will let you know as soon as I hear. I am hoping the delay means they made a decision, but time will tell.

I called and am waiting for a call back.

My husband passed away unexpectedly so I missed one call but there was no update at that time (it was early during the week of the 19th) to confirm we were on the agenda.

I've given her my phone number so she can reach me easily.
